Ditch Your Bank For A Credit Union

Are you sick of getting socked with fees, tripped by hidden penalties, earning lousy interest rates, or paying higher interest rates?

So many people are fuzzy about the differences between banks and credit unions. Here are some things to help clear it up.

Credit Unions Are Member-Owned

If you have an account at a credit union, you're a part owner in the enterprise. You are more likely to be seen as a person rather than as a "cost center".

Credit Unions Are Non-Profit

This status helps explain why interest rates tend to be significantly better, and fees fewer and smaller, at credit unions than at banks. Any profits credit unions make are distributed as dividends to their members. Banks continually invent new fees and policies to boost profits (and to pay those stunning executive salaries).

Banks Hate Credit Unions

President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Federal Credit Union Act into law in 1934 to

“promote thrift and thwart usury,” and banks have been gunning for them pretty much ever since. Because of their not-for-profit, cooperative structures, credit unions are exempted from most state and federal taxes. Banks have convinced themselves this is an unfair advantage and have spent a lot of effort, plus a fortune in lobbying fees, trying to legislate credit unions out of existence, or at least limit who can join. (I guess they thought the money was better spent there than on, say, improving their interest rates, reducing their fees or slashing their telephone hold times.)

The Credit Union advantage is clear so check out what we have to offer. You may be surprised at just how much we can help you earn more money, save more money, and meet all of your financial needs.
